

my home State of Oregon. Since Marcus Lopez, who sailed with Captain Robert Gray in 1788, became the first person of African descent known to set foot in Oregon, a great many Black Americans have helped shape the history of my State. Throughout this month, I have come to the floor to highlight some of their stories. Today, on the last day of Black History Month, I have come to honor one more.

Louis A. Southworth was a blacksmith, fiddler, and farmer. Though a combination of his contagious personality, appealing fiddle playing, and an unwavering devotion to civic duty, he became one of Oregon's most respected and well-liked citizens of his time.

Born into slavery in Tennessee in 1830, he later moved with his family to Oregon in 1851. Although slavery was officially banned in Oregon, it was still practiced with some frequency. While working in the gold mines, Southworth soon found that people greatly enjoyed his musical talents. He was able to parlay his talents on a fiddle into an extra source of income, and at age 28, bought his freedom for $1,000. The phrase "fiddling for freedom" soon caught on, and Louis Southworth became some what of a local hero.

In 1879, he moved with his wife and adopted son to the south bank of the Alsea River. Southworth, with his family and his fiddle, soon won over this small community. He worked as a farmer, and ferried cargo and passengers across the bay to town.

As more people began to move into the community, he donated some of his land to build a local school house and later served as chair of the school board. Along with his new life came a renewed sense of civic duty. Southworth became a dedicated political activist. During the elections of 1890, a strong storm ravaged his small town. Unafraid of the weather, Louis Southworth rigged two oil drums to his boat for buoyancy and rowed across the bay to the polling place. As it turns out, he was the only person to cast a vote in Waldport that day.

Despite the chaotic times in which he lived, Louis Southworth was embraced by his community. Before he died in 1917, his neighbors raised the $300 needed to pay off his mortgage in Corvallis, OR.

Louis Southworth provides one example of a man triumphing over seemingly insurmountable odds. As a Black man living in troubled times, his personality, compassion, work ethic, talents, generosity, and devotion to the community service allowed him to become a respected leader. He was accepted by many of his peers, of all races, religions, and ethnic backgrounds, long before this was common or expected. His legacy of service and kindness is one that lives on today, and one that should be remembered for years to come. On this last day of Black History Month, I believe it is only right to celebrate an Oregonian like Louis Southworth, whose contributions to race relations in Oregon, while great, have not yet received the attention they deserve.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

CORPORAL MATTHEW REED SMITH, USMC

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I rise to speak on the recent passing of Corporal Matthew Reed Smith of the United States Marine Corps. Corporal Smith was a native of West Valley City, UT, who died in a helicopter crash near the town of Rutbah, Iraq. Corporal Smith was one of 29 Marines and one Navy sailor who lost their lives in that fateful accident. Today, I know the Senate will join me in honoring their memory as heroes who died in performance of their duty. The sacrifice of these brave servicemen will be remembered forever.

Corporal Smith, during his younger years, often dreamed of being in the Armed Forces. I have been told that as a child he would play make-believe with his brothers on the hill in front of their home and that he always insisted on being the "Marine." Nicknamed the "Three Musketeers" by their mother, Corporal Smith and his two brothers grew up doing the things they loved most, camping, hunting, wrestling, and riding their motorbikes in the mountains.

Corporal Smith joined the Marines because "they were the first ones in there." As a Marine, he fought bravely to expel the insurgents from the city of Fallujah. There were times during the fighting when he could hear the bullets whistling past his head. His best friend lost an arm and a leg in the Battle for Fallujah.

Being unable to obtain leave in order to attend the wedding of his brother last March, members of his family made a life-size cutout of Corporal Smith and moved it around the dance floor as the night progressed. On learning of Corporal Smith's death, his family placed the cutout in the living room of their home. That silhouette of Corporal Smith, dressed sharply in his Marine uniform, today remains in our hearts as a symbol that he served his country with honor and courage.

Recently, I had the opportunity to visit a website created to honor him. I was struck by the number of comments and sentiments that clearly showed that Corporal Smith was a true friend and loved by all who knew him. In one particularly moving tribute, a fellow mourner wrote that he could not imagine Corporal Smith departing this life "in any other way than selflessly serving others."

Mr. President, it is a privilege to learn about the extraordinary life of such a man.

SUSPENSION OF RUSSIA FROM THE G8

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today, along with my good friend Senator McCain, to speak about a resolution that is of great importance to the cause of democracy which we have devoted America to advance at home and around the world. In November 2003 Senator McCain and I were moved by Russia's failure to adhere to democratic principles to submit a resolution to hold Russia accountable for the commitments Moscow made when first invited to participate in what became known as the G8. Since then, the situation in Russia has deteriorated. I am particularly pleased that Senators BAYH, BURNS, CHAMBLISS, SMITH, and DURBIN have joined as original co-sponsors of this resolution indicating the increasing Senatorial concern over the accelerating erosion of democratic and economic freedom in Russia. As President Bush returns from his meeting with President Putin at the summit in Bratislava, we call once again on the President of the United States and the Secretary of State to work with our partners in the G7 to condition Russia's continued participation in the G8 on Russia's compliance with basic standards of democracy and rule of law.

We have a real stake in Russia's adherence to democratic norms because our commitment to Russia's transition toward democracy is critical to secure a peaceful future with Russia. The G7 nations are highly industrialized countries bound together by fundamental principles of democracy, rule of law, a free market system, and respect for human rights.

The actions of President Putin over the past few years have raised serious concerns about Russia's commitment to these principles. There is a long list of well-documented antidemocratic developments in Russia. The Putin administration has limited freedom of expression in Russia by seizing independent media organizations and suppressing the activities of independent journalists, religious organizations, and nongovernmental organizations that are all integral components of a healthy civil society. The Russian government's dismantling of Yukos and the arrest of its founder Mikhail Khodorkovsky 16 months ago raised serious doubts about Russia's commitment to free market principles and rule of law as well as respect for property and shareholder rights. The Federal Security Services, FSB, play a strong role in Russia's power structures in a manner reminiscent of the KGB in the old regime. President Putin's support for the first fraudulent results in the Ukrainian presidential elections last year exhibited disregard for basic democratic principles. Fortunately, a democratic outcome prevailed in a new vote and Yushchenko's victory—a very
